 NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION COMMISSION DE LA CAPITALE NATIONALE		No.	2023-C08
		To	Board of Directors
For	DECISION	Date	2023-06-22
Subject/Title
Progress update and name recommendation for the parkway renaming initiative.
Summary
Informed by the advice of the Advisory Committee on Toponymy (ACT) and following staff's analysis and recommendation, the proposed naming approach for the Sir John A. Macdonald Parkway was presented to the NCC Board of Directors in January 2023 for decision. The Board unanimously agreed that the NCC move forward with an Algonquin naming and engagement exercise. This approach aligns with the principles of the NCC's Toponymy Policy and with the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's calls to action related to language, culture and commemoration. It also offers an opportunity to promote Algonquin voices and revitalize Algonquin culture and language. As well, the initiative is in alignment with the Plan for Canada's Capital (PFCC) objective related to an inclusive and meaningful National Capital Region. This submission provides an update on the progress and the outcomes of engagement activities and recommendation for approval of the new name of the parkway that was developed through the Algonquin naming and engagement exercise. If the proposed name is approved by the NCC Board of Directors, the signage with the new name will be publicly unveiled during an event in September 2023. An unveiling ceremony would be held, followed by an event that would include opportunities to share stories with the public. Installation of the signage depicting the new name will start prior to the scheduled signage unveiling.
Risk Summary
The central risk associated with the selection of the new parkway name relates to the change of the current name. These risks are heightened due to the high visibility of the site and the current social climate. Additionally, there are risks of public misperception relating to the Algonquin naming and engagement exercise undertaken to recommend a new name.

2. Authority

- National Capital Act, s. 10(2) (c)(d)(i)

Pursuant to the following:

- NCC Toponymy Policy (April 2022), section 4: Process, c. Advisory Committee on Toponymy (ACT): "The Committee may also review other matters involving toponymy-related issues that may be referred to the Committee by the CEO."
- Terms of Reference of the Advisory Committee on Toponymy, 3. Duties and Responsibilities of the Committee, section 3.6. The Committee may also review other matters involving toponymy issues that are referred to the Committee by the CEO

3. Context

Informed by the ACT advice and following staff's analysis, the NCC shared a recommendation on next steps for the naming exercise to the Executive Management Committee and Board of Directors. In January 2023, the Board agreed with staff advice to move forward with an Algonquin naming and engagement exercise.

As part of this exercise, a launch meeting was held on February 13, 2023, with both Chiefs and representatives from the cultural centres of Kitigan Zibi Anishinābeg First Nation and the Algonquins of Pikwàkanagàn First Nation communities. From that meeting, the approach, timeline, and planning needs were agreed upon by meeting participants. It was also determined that workshop objectives were to gather stories and Anishinābe Algonquin knowledge on the parkway corridor, including the connection to the river and the land and to reach a consensus on a name recommendation.

Public engagement activities were also undertaken to inform the public of the Algonquin naming exercise and gather stories about the parkway, the river, and surrounding areas. An online engagement activity took place from May 2 to May 21, 2023, and included a survey, discussion board and interactive map activity. An in-person public open house and dialogue session were also held on May 10, 2023.

The objectives of these engagement activities were to gather stories from the public on their memories about the area and/or the significance of the area to them and their community. The stories will be captured in a summary of the Algonquin naming and engagement exercise, as well as the public engagement activities, which in the future, may inform an interpretation plan for the riverfront park.

The ACT last met on May 9, 2023, where members continued their consideration of the name review for the Sir John A. Macdonald Parkway. At this meeting, the following feedback was shared:

- Use full words, appropriate accents and accurate pronunciation when communicating the proposed parkway name. This effort is a priority of the Anishinābe Algonquin Nation.
- Explore a variety of communication tools to ensure the public understands the meaning behind the proposed name (e.g., QR codes or adjacent plaque).
- Host the signage unveiling on the east end of the parkway to showcase the beauty of the river.
- Invite Elders and Youth to participate and speak at the unveiling ceremony. The event format should include a circle, smudging/sacred fire and a meal. The event should be framed as an honouring ceremony for the place and the land.

4. Analysis

The Algonquin naming and engagement exercise is examined below to highlight the integration of ACT recommendations and share the final outcomes.

Algonquin naming exercise

Representatives from Kitigan Zibi Anishinābeg First Nation and the Algonquins of Pikwàkanagàn First Nation communities gathered at the Nawapon Indigenous Commons at Algonquin College to exchange stories and discuss name options for the parkway. Cultural Centre representatives from both communities were responsible for liaising between the NCC and First Nation communities and confirming attendance.

Community members met on two separate occasions. The first workshop took place on April 3, 2023, while the second workshop was on April 20, 2023. A similar format occurred at both workshops, the events included opening prayers, introductory remarks to set workshop objectives and/or revisit comments raised at previous session, deliberation among community members without NCC presence, roundtable discussions were concluded with closing remarks and a prayer.

Results

The proposed name for the parkway is Kichi Zībī Mīkan, meaning “Great River Road”. This will translate to Promenade Kichi Zībī and Kichi Zībī Parkway in French and English.

Participants further recommended that the full name in the Anishinābemowin, the Algonquin language, should be the most prominent language displayed on the panel.

When recommending the name, community members thought deeply over the significance of the river and surrounding area for the Algonquin Nation and shared several stories that were equally meaningful for both communities.

The name highlights the place and importance of the Ottawa River as a great and bountiful river that has provided for peoples’ needs for generations, just as it does today. The river has served to build relationships, connect communities and allow people to relate to one another. Many spoke of the strength of the river in connecting all Algonquin communities. The theme of connection was carried across both workshops.

Referring to the parkway as Kichi Zībī Mīkan marks a reference to the original name for the river. This name presents an opportunity to pay respects to Algonquin ancestors and their lived experiences. This name serves to reconnect the Algonquin Nation with their history, language and culture, while also acknowledging that this name was used by other Nations that would have travelled in the area.

Furthermore, the names build upon larger efforts Indigenous peoples are deploying to reclaim their Ojđībikan; meaning roots, or alternatively origins. These origins connect the Algonquin communities to one another and to the land. Reclaiming the original name Kichi Zībī contributes to reconciliation efforts and acknowledges the reciprocal relationship between the Algonquin Nation and the river.

Public engagement exercise

As part of the initiative, the public were invited to contribute by sharing their stories and memories about the parkway, the river, and surrounding area and learning about the Algonquin naming exercise.

Online activities were hosted on the PlaceSpeak platform and offered the chance to complete a survey, join an online discussion prompted by scripted questions and pin comments to an interactive map of the parkway. These activities took place from May 2 to May 21, 2023, and over 300 people interacted in these online activities.

The in-person event was held on May 10, 2023. It was designed to include an open-house style format – a self-paced visit with opportunities to share stories – and a facilitated dialogue.

Stories gathered through the engagement activities will be featured in a summary report alongside the results from the Algonquin naming and engagement exercise. The report will be published in September 2023. These stories may also inform a future interpretation plan on the area, including the parkway and the riverfront park.

Results

At the start of the in-person event, participants were asked by a Kitigan Zibi Anishinābeg elder what reconciliation meant to them. Many spoke about the importance of listening and their commitment to learn more about how to support Indigenous peoples, and more specifically the Algonquin Nation as the host nation of the lands. A few noted the steps that have been taken to advance reconciliation so far, while identifying the additional work that is still required.

During the facilitated dialogue, participants enthusiastically shared their personal connection to the river and surrounding areas. Some noted enjoying the views offered at the parkway and quality time with their families. Others identified the parkway as a much appreciated active transportation destination. The overarching theme carried throughout the event is that the parkway holds profound significance for many residents of and visitors to the area.

The online engagement comments highlight a strong appreciation of the beauty of the natural environment of the parkway and the Ottawa River. The comments echo similar sentiments as above about active transportation on the parkway. Several respondents noted that the area is home to a vibrant wildlife and ecosystem.

One respondent shared that their family had lived near the parkway for over 100 years, and they have enjoyed watching the area evolve. They most appreciated having a space for quiet reflection, learning and spending time with family and friends.

Recommendation

That the NCC move forward with the recommended name for the parkway and that a signage unveiling ceremony and event be held at the end of September 2023 in honour of the parkway's new name.

5. Financial Details

To date, $45.1K has been spent from the total of $86.5K allocated for the project budget. A breakdown of these expenses is outlined in the table below.

Items	Total spent	Total budget
Indigenous workshops (logistics)	$18.2K	$20K
Public engagement activities (external consultant and logistics)	$25K	$30K
Event planning and management (signage unveiling ceremony and event)	$0	$25K
Reporting, editing and translation	$2.9K	$11.5K

As noted above, a budget will need to be set aside for four new signs along the parkway. Below are estimates for the new signage based on recent comparable projects and quotations.

- New signage production and installation, costs are approximately $60K
  - $8K for the structure and $7K for the footing for four signs

Event planning, for the Algonquin naming and engagement exercise as well as translation and editing costs were captured in a previous submission to the Executive Management Committee and NCC Board of Directors.

New budget items have been identified to support event planning for the signage unveiling ceremony and event and new signage.

In the future, a budget will need to be set aside for planning activities required as part of the development of an interpretation plan for the parkway and riverfront park.

6. Opportunities and Expected Results

A review of the parkway name and ensuing Algonquin naming and engagement exercise contribute to the themes of Culture and Language as well as History and Commemoration found in the Truth and Reconciliation Commission calls to action, while also meeting a Plan for Canada's Capital (PFCC) 2017-2067 key policy objective to "contribute to the recognition of Indigenous peoples in the toponymy of the region."

Moreover, the naming exercise provided an opportunity for information sharing and storytelling opportunities to exchange with the public throughout the initiative. A further opportunity also exists to contribute to the interpretation plan for the area, as plans for the riverfront park advance. This endeavour would need to be coordinated with the Department of Canadian Heritage and align with strategies and guidelines outlined in the Ottawa River South Shore Riverfront Park Plan.

The result of the Algonquin naming and engagement exercise will involve a signage unveiling ceremony and event to commemorate the initiative, with the intent to host the event in September 2023. Holding the event around this time is significant and enables the NCC to openly communicate its commitment to reconciliation. Moreover, the NCC is seeking to elevate and showcase Algonquin voices and experiences and increase public understanding and interest in Anishinābe Algonquin knowledge, culture and language.

7. Alignment with Government and NCC Policies

Gender Based Analysis Plus (GBA Plus) is an analytical process used to assess the impact of policies, programs and initiatives on individuals belonging to diverse identity-based groups. As outlined in this document, the NCC has sustained its commitment to GBA Plus in key planning documents such as the PFCC and within the Corporate Plan. GBA Plus considerations have therefore been integrated in the Algonquin naming and engagement exercise, as well as the public engagement activities.

In addition, the parkway naming initiative builds on the Government of Canada's work to advance reconciliation and renew the relationship with Indigenous peoples. By committing to an Algonquin naming and engagement exercise, the NCC positively contributes to the revitalization of Algonquin culture and language and the restoration of Algonquin place names. Moreover, this approach aligns with the values of integrity, inclusiveness, and relevance outlined in the NCC Toponymy Policy along with the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's calls to action related to language, culture, and commemoration.

GBA Plus considerations have informed the initial toponymy submission and have been integrated in each step of the naming exercise. Following initial discussions with members of the Algonquin Nation, NCC staff developed an Algonquin engagement plan that outlined the discussion approaches for the naming exercise. Thereafter, staff worked collaboratively with the cultural centres of Kitigan Zibi Anishinābeg First Nation and the Algonquins of Pikwàkanagàn First Nation to lead the discussion.

As part of the naming and engagement exercise, considerations have also been made to the manner that Indigenous peoples could be positively impacted by the results of the initiative. During this initiative, Anishinābe Algonquin knowledge keepers have shared stories of cultural significance. Therefore, NCC staff have a heightened responsibility to ensure that such knowledge is shared with the utmost care and respect. As such, NCC staff have received expressed consent from community members prior to publicly sharing the stories. Also, workshop participants have reviewed the stories to ensure that sensitivities towards Anishinābe Algonquin knowledge are maintained. This will provide a significant opportunity for education and information sharing with the public.

As with all naming practices, there are risks of negative public perceptions of the exercise. To mitigate this risk, we have adopted a comprehensive communication and outreach strategy that seeks to increase public understanding and interest in Anishinābe Algonquin knowledge, culture and language.

8. Risks and Mitigation Measures

Renaming risks are generally related to the potential controversy of the review of the current name, public perceptions of the exercise, the reasoning in support of a renaming and the implementation of the proposed name. Below is a breakdown of the main risks associated with the renaming at this stage of the process

9. Engagement and Communications

- A public in-person activity took place on May 10, 2023 and online engagement took place from May 2 to 21, 2023.
- A summary report of the Algonquin naming and engagement exercise and stories from the public will be prepared. It is anticipated final English and French copies of the summary would be published alongside the signage unveiling ceremony and event.
- A comprehensive communications strategy has been developed to ensure that the process and timeline are clear for all audiences. Some communication products that have been developed include:
  - Social media messages
  - A project webpage
  - Updated Q&As and key messages
  - Press release
  - Newsletters
- A signage implementation plan has been developed, with installation being targeted over fall 2023 to spring 2024. The first sign would be installed before the signage unveiling ceremony and event.

10. Next Steps

- Conduct an audit of NCC materials and tools requiring an update following name approval.
- Prepare the summary report, providing an overview of the Algonquin naming and engagement activities and the storytelling approach with the public.
- If the name is approved, the signage unveiling ceremony and event would be held in September 2023, to unveil the new signage. An event would follow to provide information about the new name and naming exercise, as well as Anishinābe Algonquin knowledge about the land and river.
- Coordination and planning of signage implementation to take place throughout the summer (i.e., design concepts, signage plan, contract awarding, fabrication, and installation).
- Signage implementation beginning in September 2023.
- The NCC will build on this initiative to continue to engage with a variety of ethnocultural group representatives to further develop a toponymy workplan. A review of current NCC asset names will be developed to better understand representation in the National Capital Region. New requests will be brought to the ACT, as appropriate.
